An outbreak of 116 illnesses of Salmonella Bareilly has been linked to a yellowfin tuna product used in sushi. The CDC had been investigating the cluster of illnesses for the past few weeks but had not identified a source until April 13 (illnesses had been linked to consuming sushi and sushi-like products). There have been 12 hospitalizations, and no deaths associated with this outbreak. Many of the people who became ill reported eating raw tuna in sushi as “spicy tuna.”

The implicated product, processed and distributed by Moon Marine USA Corporation (also known as MMI) of Cupertino, Calif. is made of tuna back meat, which according to the FDA press release is specifically scraped off the bones and looks like ground product. The company has recalled 58,828 pounds of product.

Moon Marine USA Corporation or MMI and Nakaochi Scrape AA or AAA were printed on boxes of the product when it was initially sold to distributors. Boxes may have been broken into smaller lots for further sale.

The U.S. FDA's recall notice can be found here: http://1.usa.gov/Io3OnG

The U.S. CDC's outbreak investigation information can be found here: http://1.usa.gov/INbobT

For more information contact Ben Chapman, benjamin_chapman@ncsu.edu or Doug Powell at dpowell@ksu.edu